DOWNLOAD: .An audio recording obtained exclusively by CBC News appears to show how Ontario's minister of government and consumer services, Elizabeth McCully, acted inappropriately by offering to arrange a meeting with an alleged sexual assault victim who complained about her living conditions. The recorded telephone conversation occurred in November 2016, several months after McCully became Ontario's minister of government and consumer services in September of that year. The victim, in the recording, can be heard crying and complaining that she has lived with a man for more than 30 years and that she doesn't want to end her relationship. She tells McCully she's been beaten up and feels like she's "getting raped," and says she feels unsafe at home. "I don't want to end my relationship," the woman says in the recording. McCully asks how she can help, but the woman says it's not that simple. She says she wants to break up with her boyfriend but not without an arrangement. "I'm just going to come clean on the whole thing," she says. "I want to end it. I want a relationship. I want a breakup and, like, a plan." She says she wants to do what she has always done, "I want to stay in [my] relationship, not end it, for [my] comfort and security." 'A heartless conversation' The woman tells McCully she needs money, and that she wants to get a place of her own with the money she was given for the home. "We're having a heartless conversation," McCully says. "That's not what I was going to do." "I know, it's not," the woman replies. "But I have nowhere to go." The conversation continues with McCully promising to help the woman find a shelter and support. CBC News obtained the recording through an access to information request. 'It's going to be absolutely perfect for me' In an email to CBC News, McCully says she would not agree to a meeting because she had no authority to do so. "The responsibility for addressing the situation is squarely on the shoulders of the landlord," McCully wrote. In an interview with CBC News, McCully said she was wrong to speak to the woman and that she regretted doing so. "I should have directed my department staff to offer assistance if she was in need of help 2d92ce491b
