Polymerase chain reaction (PCR) and oligonucleotide-directed sequencing methods have been developed for the early detection of human leukocyte antigen (HLA)-typed fetuses. HLA-typed samples have been collected from pregnant couples at various time periods during the gestational period from month 3 to month 18 of gestation. HLA genotyping of the fetuses at different time points has been performed by PCR-based methods. Each baby has been evaluated for the absence or presence of detectable maternal HLA alleles by PCR-based techniques. The PCR-typing of HLA-DQA locus has been carried out on genomic DNA isolated from the amniotic fluid and the blood samples. A correlation between maternal DQA genotype and the fetal HLA-DQA genotype has been observed in three cases. A direct correlation between DQA and DRB1 genotypes is also observed in two of the three cases. This invention relates to a process for the electrochemical reduction of nitrates and nitrites. This invention further relates to a process for the hydrotreatment of aqueous hydrocarbon solutions, particularly the solution produced by the catalytic partial oxidation of a paraffinic hydrocarbon stream to produce a crude diesel fuel stream. This invention further relates to a process for converting a heavy fraction of the crude diesel fuel stream to a light fraction. This invention further relates to a process for the electrochemical recovery of ammonium carbonate from a carbon dioxide containing gas stream. In the above process, in particular, the invention relates to an improvement in the prior art British Patent Specification No. 2,080,326, in which a process is described for the electrochemical reduction of nitrates, nitrites and inorganic nitrogen oxide compounds contained in aqueous media, such as waste and polluted waters and the like, a method which is considered to be of particular importance for the treatment 3ef4e8ef8d
