Maurice Brossard Maurice Brossard (June 9, 1922 – December 9, 2010) was a French cinematographer best known for his work in the director's chairs. Born in Paris, Brossard was the son of the hotelier and restaurateur Joseph Brossard. He received his first cinematography assignment as an assistant to director Marcel Carné in 1943, but the end of the occupation of France and his subsequent internment for three years in an internment camp for "political deportees" made his plans for the cinema unrealized. He returned to France as an assistant director for Claude Autant-Lara's 1945 film Le Sang des bêtes, and began to study cinematography. He worked as second assistant on Alfred Hitchcock's 1944 film Sabotage, with his first major on-screen credit being as second assistant cameraman on the 1949 Marcel Carné film La Femme de l'attribut, and in 1953 completed his B.A. degree in cinematography at the Paris-Sorbonne University. His first full-fledged screen directorial assignment came in 1960 when he co-directed the film Le Voyageur de la nuit. Brossard went on to direct two dozen films, including the 1963 comedy Les Jeux de l'amour et du hasard, the controversial 1966 film Les Variétés-sous-peine, and the television miniseries L'Enfant d'Hollywood (1975). Using a Qualitative Approach to Exploring the Relationships Between Rigor and Performance of Financial Literacy Education and Its Effects on Students' Business Finance Knowledge and Financial Literacy. Financial education (FE) aims to help students gain an understanding and appropriate attitude toward financial topics and concepts. In this study, we applied the comprehensively modified General Education-Financial Literacy Scale (M-GE-FLS) to conduct a large-scale study of the quantitative and qualitative relationship between the rigor of financial education and its effect on students' knowledge and financial literacy. We also utilized semi-structured interviews to explore students' subjective opinions of the effects of the financial education. Based on the results, we propose a hypothesis on the relationship between teacher engagement and effectiveness of financial literacy education. The experimental sample includes 1,717 middle school students aged 13-18 years from four randomly selected classes across ten middle schools in two provinces of Taiwan. The data analysis for the survey included regression, Cronbach's α , and structural equation modeling techniques. We also identified the relationships among the structural equation models, along with influencing factors, in these middle school students. The empirical results suggest that higher levels of teacher engagement can enhance the effectiveness of financial education (PEFE) in promoting student knowledge and financial literacy and that PEFE teachers should be stimulated to engage in effective teaching practices. We suggest a hypothesis on teacher engagement that is in line with the assumptions that more academic responsibilities take up a large portion of teacher's energy and thus reduce their attention to PEFE. Our findings and hypothetical model will help increase the understanding of teacher engagement in PEFE, and thus provide the most appropriate approaches for the development and improvement of teacher engagement.
