There are many ways to get rid of duplicate files, but the most effective is to use the built-in Recycle Bin function, which is generally stored on drive C:. In order to avoid losing any file, the drive has to be filled in advance by the Recycle Bin. So if the space in your drive is somewhat scarce, you'll want to delete old files first. After doing that, you can head to the Recycle Bin folder itself and check if there's anything left in there. If so, you can select all the files and delete them all at once, using the Recycle Bin function in Windows Explorer. If you're still a little uncertain of which file you want to get rid of, then you can always use Duplicate Finder instead, which is a tool that does the job with ease. If you want to avoid messing with the Recycle Bin, you can also check the option "Keep folders and files forever" in the settings. This will allow you to remove specific files when you know they're just empty space and can thus be deleted, or when you
