An agreed-upon small list of expectations for a person might go a long way in helping someone you are dating decide if they can be a good match for you, but there has to be room for other than the expected. How about never judging someone's career or work? What if the person you are dating is an alcoholic, drug addict, or in the sex trade? If you are this person's matchmaker, you better make sure your suggestions are intelligent and well thought-out. Finally, would you ever let a child be on TV with you and allow them to sell you to a million-dollar company? Why would you subject a child to this? You are depriving a child of the opportunity to have a relationship with a person they found to be truly a good match for them. It is also a form of child abuse. "The greatest way to find a mate is not to have any expectations about what the other person's life should be like," says Kim Tallas, a licensed marriage and family counselor. "I encourage people to get to know each other for who they are and find a way to be part of each other's lives. And remember: if you've met someone you love, why would you want to go through the rest of your life alone?" By the way, not to burst any bubbles, but if you are so involved in your relationship that you are willing to have a child with the person you are dating, then you would do well to go to counseling together and learn to communicate effectively. In the past five years, she has worked with many clients who divorced, broke up with men, or have been married many times. "I would rather not have to do this work, but a child often needs a mother and a father," she says. "Children especially need a solid mother figure, and if their father cannot provide this, they may 3e33713323
