Category:CD-ROM-related software Category:AutoCAD Category:AutoCAD x64Q: Why do I need to use "for loop" if this can be done with "while loop"? I'm doing some exercises on functional programming where I need to read from a file. I want to read from the file and add to a vector that will never change. So I did this: #include #include #include #include #include #include using namespace std; int main() { std::vector vec; vec.reserve(1000); ifstream in; in.open("in.txt"); while(!in.eof()) { in >> vec; } in.close(); } The code worked fine, until I tried "goodie++", where I did that (in vim): Ctrl+X, Ctrl+S :%s/vector/vector/g And then I get the following error (gcc): vec.reserve(1000); Is this for not changing anything? Why did I have to "make" a new vector (I know the vector is supposed to be in the memory, so why do I need to make a new one?). When I got the error, I knew I had to add a loop, but it puzzles me why I had to add the loop. Why couldn't I have just written this?: vec.reserve(1000); in >> vec; Why would I have had to add a loop, when I was just writing something that is available? A: You could just write the following instead: vec.reserve(1000); while(in >> 1cb139a0ed
