A total of 288 Hy-Line W36 hens, 60 weeks old at the start of the experiment, were reared on a barley-based diet (control, 58% barley) or two diets composed of 58 or 31% fish meal or soybean meal respectively, and fed to satiation from week 16 to week 52. The dietary protein level of the two fish meal-based diets was lower than that of the control diet, and that of the soybean meal-based diet was higher than that of the control diet. The dietary restriction of fish meal and soybean meal-based diet reduced the weight gain of hens between weeks 24 and 48 of the experiment. The dietary restriction of fish meal-based diet also reduced the weight gain of hens between weeks 20 and 48 of the experiment. The breast muscle weights of hens fed fish meal-based diets were lower than that of the control diet group from week 24 to week 52 of the experiment. The weight of the thigh muscle and of the abdominal fat pad of hens fed the fish meal-based diets were lower than that of the control diet group from week 24 to week 52 of the experiment. The breast muscle weights of hens fed fish meal-based diets were lower than that of the soybean meal-based diet group from week 48 of the experiment. The decrease of the weight of the thigh muscle and of the abdominal fat pad of hens fed fish meal-based diets was greater than that of the soybean meal-based diet group from week 24 to week 48 of the experiment. As a result, the dietary restriction of fish meal and soybean meal-based diets increased the breast muscle yield./* * Copyright (c) 2018, salesforce.com, inc. * All rights reserved. * SPDX-License-Identifier: MIT * For full license text, see the LICENSE file in the repo root or */ import {
