particularly, the invention relates to a system for injecting a fuel into an internal combustion engine. As is well known, injection systems for fuel injection valves typically include a pressure supply pump for pressurizing the fluid used to operate the fuel injection valves, a pressure control valve, a solenoid valve, and a fuel line for delivering the pressurized fuel from the supply pump to the fuel injection valves. In a typical injection system, the pressure control valve is actuated by the solenoid valve, which is energized to vary the pressure in the fuel line. The fuel injection valves inject the fuel into the engine cylinder, and the rate and the timing of the injection events are determined by the pressure in the fuel line. U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,344,338 and 5,387,084, which are assigned to the assignee of the present invention, disclose a fuel injection system including a fuel tank for containing fuel, a pressure supply pump having a suction port connected to the fuel tank, a pressure control valve having a control port and a suction port, the control port being connected to the suction port of the supply pump, a first solenoid valve having a solenoid and a drain, the solenoid being connected to the control port of the pressure control valve, and a filter in the fuel line for filtering the fuel. 54b84cb42d
