As a man, I tend to center on the aesthetic work that defines me. Every day, I. The wad is about 35mb.Q: Importing data from a file in python I have 2 text files, one with 25 rows. Each row has multiple columns, and each column corresponds to a word. I need to import the first file and split each row by the number of words that are in each row, so that each word is in its own column. How do I import the data from one file to another file, one word per row, where each row is split into columns where each column is each word from the file. A: Just use the 'unix' version of sed: `$ sed -n '2~4{N;s/\t/g;p;}' myfile.txt` Reading your file from the command line: `$ sed -n '2~4{N;s/ \t/g;p;}' myfile.txt` The above will read your line like so: `begin` `N` read your file `$(2)` this is the first line in the input file `$(4)` that is (save the file number) in line 2 which was saved in the `s/.../...` command so the `s` command will read through the first block of the input file and replace any character ( `/` ) and line ( `$(2)` ) with a character ( `\t` ) and the number of lines ( `$(4)` ) so `sed` will now read the file until it gets to the end `$(1)` save the contents of the lines we read so far to the output file } print out all the rest of the lines `p` `sed` is just a line oriented editor. The more you learn the more you see. It is a handy tool to have. See the /etc/ries.conf file on my Linux machines and you can see the various text files that are used to edit files that you run. A: From both Unix and Windows utilities, the simplest way is to use the paste command. \$ cat a Hello World \$ cat b Hello World \$ paste a b Hello World \$ paste -
