The invention also relates to a method of down-regulating T cell activity which involves the conjugation of an agent to the T cell antigen receptor of a T cell. Such conjugates are termed herein T cell antigen receptor targeting conjugates. WO 2006/111280 and EP 1 314 026 teach the use of polyethylene glycol (PEG)-linked bispecific antibody ligands specific for T cell antigen receptor which may be used in a variety of therapeutic purposes. In general, bispecific antibody ligands which are specific for T cell antigen receptors may be formed between two different antigens. The formation of the complex often comprises the association of two different monoclonal antibodies. One or both of the two monoclonal antibodies may or may not bind to the target cell antigen receptor and in many cases both of the two monoclonal antibodies bind to the target cell antigen receptor. T cells play an important role in the immune system. The antigen receptors present on T cells recognize antigens present on other cells. When the antigen which the T cell recognizes is not on itself, but on the surface of another cell, the T cells bind to this other cell and clonally proliferate. T cells bind to a particular antigen present on the surface of another cell by recognizing the antigen in a complex with major histocompatibility complex (MHC) molecules. This recognition can be aided by the presentation of the antigenic peptide and the MHC molecule on the surface of the antigen-presenting cell (APC). T cells are derived from thymocytes which are formed in the thymus. This tissue contains epithelial cells called thymic stromal cells, which aid in the maturation of immature thymocytes into the functional T cells. The thymus produces functionally mature T cells for 5-6 days after birth. Post-thym
