NDP This game has been created by a group of researchers at the Naval Postgraduate School in Monterey, California. A related version for Xbox 360 has been made available, featuring compatibility with the original Wiimote. The game combines the action of billiards with the possibility of a two-handed play with the player's dominant hand. The aim is to block the opponent's cue and score points by landing on the balls. The game was created by Dave Dawes, Scott

Galentine, David T. Kollai, Dan Pruss, Jon Slutsky and Nate Hoechlin. By beating his opponent on the same game, a user is allowed to access the Users and Games section and record their performance. After one week, the game is retired, and any points that remain in the user's account are transferred to a non-revocable prize pool for the development of the game.

Awards In August 2007, the developers were awarded the Carnegie Mellon University Student Prize for Excellence in Games (EPIC Game 2007). Gameplay The player attempts to make shots, which are the objects that hit a ball to score points. Shots can be made by: The player presses a ball to make it move. The player may move the ball with a magnet attached to the shaft, and move it in any direction. The player may move the ball while rotating it around its axis. In tournament play, the game allows up to 3 players. Gameplay mode A number of game modes are available in the gameplay section: Classic Tournament Practice Each mode is described below. Classic Classic is the first mode of the game. The object of this mode is to try to block a series of balls, like in real billiards. The balls are struck by a cue ball from the player's side. The player is given 8 balls to start, and each shot can be returned as a miss. To make shots, the player presses the appropriate button. The player may make multiple shots by pressing the same button multiple times, and multiple shots will stack. Once a ball is struck, it will follow that cue ball to the next target. A few variations exist, such as the double bank shot, and hitting a cue ball with another ball.

Tournament Tournament mode is a more advanced version of the Classic mode. The aim of this mode is
