It is easy to show that the probability for a point, which is an intersection of two perpendicular lines, to be the closest to the origin is $1/3$. Now, I want to find the probability for the same point to be the closest to the origin, if the two perpendicular lines are orthogonal to the x - and y -axes respectively. I have tried using the law of total probability and I wrote the probability for the point P to be the closest to the origin as a function of h_y and h_x . I am not sure how to solve that function from the given problem. A: The distance between the origin and a point which is the intersection of two perpendicular lines $y=mx$ and $y=-mx$ is $d=|mx|-mx$. It is maximized when $x=0$ so that $d=|m||x|$. A: If you are using VMware, VirtualBox or Microsoft's Virtual PC you can use PPSSPP (PSP emulator) to run your game. It is downloaded with the.iso file and then run as a program inside your emulator. Check the emulator's configuration first to be sure you can run the emulator. Before running PPSSPP, check its configuration and change the emulated memory size to minimum the size of the game memory. Configure your emulator and then run PPSSPP. During the process you will have to leave the emulator. It will take time and your game may freeze during this process. Fresh off the success of Easy Likes, Seamless Social has released a new free social media app called Shoutout. The app lets you create a public or private message and share it through Facebook, Twitter, Tumblr, and Foursquare. All you have to do is send your message, and your friends will receive a notification on their feeds. You can use it to share any of these updates: Links Live photos Tagging Videos "Shoutout is focused on conversations." Like the Easy Likes app, it's a fairly simple tool. It's also relatively new, so it won't have any of the speed issues that plague other social sharing apps, like Instagram. Shoutout is focused on conversations. It's hard to prove if your message spreads or not, especially if you're sending it to your friends. But if you want to share a message to your friends, this is a service that will work well. The app is free to download and has some basic features like being able to block people and tag someone in an update. The developers say that they have no plans to raise a fee for the service anytime soon. Some companies are already using Shoutout. Cirro, for example, uses the app to share brief videos from their office. So if you see a Twitter update with the #CirroCamp hashtag, that means a new video from Cirro was posted to the Shoutout app. Like Easy Likes, it's a great way to give a quick message to friends without having to keep them waiting for a longer update on your Facebook or Twitter page.
