Epstein-Barr virus (EBV) is a herpesvirus that infects B lymphocytes and is associated with several malignancies, including Burkitt lymphomas, nasopharyngeal cancers, and also renal transplant rejection. The long-term goal of this proposal is to develop methods to treat patients infected with EBV. The overall hypothesis is that expression of the EBV latent membrane protein-1 (LMP1) in human T cells causes activation of the NF- $\kappa$ B signal transduction pathway that is necessary to mediate T cell proliferation and cytokine production. The specific hypothesis for this proposal is that LMP1 activates the NF- $\kappa$ B signal transduction pathway by binding directly to members of the NF- $\kappa$ B family to activate them as homodimers. This hypothesis is based on the observation that LMP1 has a direct effect on the cellular IkappaB binding protein that blocks the action of NF- $\kappa$ B and that LMP1 trans-activates an NF- $\kappa$ B-dependent reporter plasmid. The experiments proposed here will focus on LMP1 in T cells because 1) LMP1 is expressed in T cells in vivo during EBV infection, 2) LMP1 is expressed in both latent and lytic infection of B cells and 3) LMP1 expression increases with T cell differentiation. We propose to investigate the mechanism of LMP1 activation of the NF- $\kappa$ B pathway. We will investigate the ability of LMP1 to bind directly to members of the NF- $\kappa$ B family and then determine if LMP1 homodimerizes by coimmunoprecipitation. We will determine if LMP1 modulates ubiquitination of IkappaB and trans-activates the NF- $\kappa$ B-dependent reporter plasmid. We will determine if LMP1-induced NF- $\kappa$ B activation is mediated by the NF- $\kappa$ B inducing kinase complex. Finally, we will determine if LMP1-induced NF- $\kappa$ B activation is mediated by T cell receptor signaling, especially by determining if LMP1 increases tyrosine phosphorylation

AlcOliQ is a minimalist media player and simple audio file player which focuses on playing your music and videos while doing nothing else and is extremely light weight. Version 4.0 comes with many new features, including the ability to create playlists, a new user interface, and the main change is the introduction of the ability to play music in multiple languages including Japanese, Korean, Chinese, English, French, German, Italian and Spanish. This version also comes with a revamped equalizer allowing you to create and save custom equalizer settings. Main features: Ability to create and save playlists Support for multiple languages Ability to play music in multiple languages including Japanese, Korean, Chinese, English, French, German, Italian and Spanish Ability to create custom equalizer settings allowing you to quickly and easily create an equalizer tailored to your specific listening needs ... The limitations ... AlcOliQ Media Player is a great audio player for users who prefer simple and light in their apps, but it is certainly not a full-featured one. It works just fine for playing tracks, but it does not include any functions that would make it an ideal music organizer, as it lacks any kind of playlist or playlist editor. In terms of video playback, you can play the media files, and that is about it. AlcOliQ Media Player may not be an app you can rely on when it comes to creating playlists, but if you are only planning to play music, then it will come with a lot of features that will meet your needs, and it is certainly a decent app for both old and new music lovers. AlcOliQ Media Player is available for free on the Google Play Store, but you will have to install it from a backup file. You can also find it on Uptodown. Pros It supports a lot of formats Lightweight Cons None 8. MX Player for mobile devices MX Player for mobile devices Description: MX Player is a free video player for Android and iOS devices.
