Using Layers Photoshop is built on layers. If you've ever worked with paint, you know that you paint only the bottom layer, and all of the layers underneath the painting are covered with that color. In Photoshop, the layers are the equivalent of the layers of paint. You can have as many layers as you want, and each one has a different color. To enable you to do your own version of this, here's how to make a layered image: 1. Open a new image file in Photoshop. 2. *Click the new layer icon on the Layers panel (or press CTRL+N to create a new layer, as shown in Figure 6-1). 3. Click inside your image and paint a color.

You can use the Eyedropper tool or your own brush, using any color you want, as shown in Figure 6-1. 4. Reveal the other layers by clicking the eye icon next to the layer name (like the one in the second group in Figure 6-1 ****).

1. Create a new file without being prompted with the file name Open a new file in Photoshop Elements (Photoshop CC) by pressing the New Document button. Go to File > New > Open, navigate to where you want to save the file, then press Open or OK. In some versions, you will be prompted with a message asking you to enter the file name. If you are prompted, you will get the full path to your new file. For example, if you choose Photoshop CC 2017 from the Open dialog, you will get prompted with the following: As a designer, you will be prompted with the file name after creating a new document. No, you don't have to enter the path. Just press OK. Using this method, you can create a file without having to give it a file name. If you choose to save the file on the desktop, you can give it a name and then click OK.

2. Duplicate Image Duplicate one or more images with Ctrl + J or right-click > Duplicate Image. Double click the image to view it or drag it where you want. When you want to change the image, you can drag one of them to the main image. Double click the image to edit the image.

3. Sharpen Text To sharpen text, select it with the Magic Wand tool, press S, and click OK. If the text is too fuzzy, you can use

With the rising popularity of notebook, personal digital assistant and palmtop personal computers for purposes such as note taking, personal or educational communications, and financial management, there is a growing need for a compact, portable, single-use device for handwritten note taking. The typical business traveler finds himself constrained by his notebook computer from making hand-written notes during brief meetings, and he would benefit from a more portable and convenient pen and paper solution. The lack of an effective means for small-scale handwritten note taking has become a substantial obstacle to the development of portable pen and paper solutions as well as to the consumer market. In many instances, it may be desirable to know the details of a conversation which has taken place in front of the user. In that instance, it is usually possible to handwrite a more or less detailed note summarizing a conversation, but such a device is awkward to use in other settings, such as at a meeting, and is difficult to perform in a public setting.// Protocol Buffers for Go with Gadgets // // Copyright (c) 2016, The GoGo Authors. Q: MyBatis not binding parameters inside my custom methods I am using MyBatis 3.0.4 and the latest version of the plugin. The method I am using is annotated with @Insert or @Select and it is only used to INSERT and SELECT data from the database. Inside the method I create a new instance of the entity I am selecting or inserting. So I cannot use the entity as a parameter. How can I bind the parameters I need? A: You can use arguments parameter for binding values to your request. For example, for get document with updated timestamp: Document d = Document.get(id); And your mybatis mapper Document.xml: SELECT * FROM dao.Document d WHERE d.id = #{id} ParameterClass: SELECT * FROM dao.Document d WHERE d.id = #{id} In you service: public Document get(Integer id) { Document d = Document.get(id); //do something return d; } Note that for correct binding, you have to use... as actual parameters. For example, for save the document in database: //mapper INSERT INTO dao.Document (id, name) VALUES (#{id}, #{name}) //service public Document insert(Document document) { Document d = Document.get(document.getId()); //do something return d; } Major League Soccer owners are proposing the league launch a domestic Player Acquisition Rule. The rule will require teams to pay at least $600,000 in order to acquire a player. The ability to keep players in the MLS will be dependent on ownership. Players entering the league this year will become eligible for an increase in salary to $315,000 in 2018. Major League Soccer
