were light intensity-dependent (maximal between 420 and 630 nm), were about 10 times larger than dark current fluctuations and were stable for several minutes. In the cones, maximum response amplitudes ranged from 17% to 33% of the initial dark current. Maximum response times ranged from 0.9 to 3 ms. These responses are of sufficient amplitude to activate glutamate-mediated synaptic inputs to the distal dendrites of these cells. Responses to brief light stimuli were biexponential with times on the order of 10-20 ms and 3-8 ms. These responses were amplitude-dependent (maximal between 180 and 400 nm) and observed in 13 cones. In cones, the amplitudes of calcium signals were similar in magnitude to the dark current fluctuation amplitude. The time course of the calcium transient in cone photoreceptors was similar in the rhodopsin-opsin bleached and unbleached regions of the cell and to the calcium transient in
