“(Using) the large amount of data we collected during the FIFA World Cup in Brazil, we were able to predict and capture the new feature of having players sprint and accelerate in mid-air, rather than simply flying with them,” said Visceral Games director of production Steve Polge. Additionally, FIFA’s core gameplay has been completely reworked to make each goal more realistic. These feature enhancements are designed to make the player feel more alive, especially in the goal area. “We started from the ground up and rebuilt our physics engine,” said gameplay director David “Davide” Causi. “The new engine allows us to handle more information and control the physics of the world, enabling us to do things like keep the ball in the center of the field instead of at the edge.” This in turn helps FIFA players better understand the types of situations they will face in real life, according to Causi. “(With) the player’s overall level of athleticism, the timing and success of the player’s movements as he makes his way into goal, including how close he is to the ball at any moment,” Causi explained. The new engine also provides enhanced ball control and more accurate player interceptions - so that the player retains the ball during realistic tackles or interceptions. “The new innovations surrounding the simulation of the ball, physics and player movement help us more accurately reproduce the real world,” he added. FIFA 22 also features new animation, audio and physics improvements, while the light engine has also been upgraded to better reflect the intensity of real-life situations. “We invested more time in the animations because it’s one of the areas we can make an immediate difference,” said animation director Roly Owers. “We also spent a lot of time working on the physics and engine.” With more accurate physics and animations, the ball will behave more realistically, and players will feel more powerful and fast during tackle, score and ball control situations. Improved art, animation, lighting and audio have also been added to locations in the stadium and pitch. "The goal is to make these re-imagined stadiums more immersive and immersive for players," said Polge.
