When reading this today, I made myself think: Does every packet need a buffer? Obviously, you need to read more than one single frame to decode a packet. But this does not mean you need to read more than one single frame until you have enough for the decoding process. A: Does every packet need a buffer? Yes, for example in a closed-source server you probably want to ensure data consistency in a case where packets are lost. You don't want the server to think that it's in a valid state when you actually are in an invalid one. For example, the state where a player has just died might be an invalid state. A: Packet senders and receivers may experience packet loss. Which means your application logic cannot always rely on the last value it received from the last packet. Which means the server may not detect a player dead before the next packet can be processed. A: It depends on the protocol you are using and the packets that your server is receiving. Some packets may get lost, and you may want to detect this on the server, and retransmit the lost packet. What's New in the ConnectCode MICR E13B Font?

The first order of business is font design: With a Cap Height of 12.5 and a Display Font Size of 6.0, the weight of characters becomes very light, and the width will keep very close to the US E13B standard. Using same pressure (0.4mm) as GB93, the legibility will be very clear. At the same time, the minimum width of the characters can be kept very similar to the standard. In the legibility test, the width of every character in U.S. E13B was compared with the standard. The minimum width in ConnectCode MICR-E13B was 0.4036mm, while 0.2388mm was used in GB93. In the same way, the character height was also tested. The minimum height was 0.6509mm in the standard, while 0.7560mm in GB93. Because of the reasons above, the connection code of ConnectCode MICR will be very clear and clear."I'm not a pig, Miss Piggy. Don't make me do something that I don't wanna do." – Ralph, in a clip from The Muppets movie Though I've enjoyed the Muppets franchise for decades now, some moments still remain a reminder of the amusing times that I spent as a child. This is one of those moments. Three observations: First, why is Miss Piggy always sporting a waist-length skirt? It's like she never changes her clothes, which is an incredible continuity failure given what a fun character her figure would be. To be fair, it is a stretchy fabric that certainly would cover her lacy underclothes, but that would at least give her a haphazard "coming and going" effect. From the constant appearance of this style, I'd say she's wearing it either so that the Muppets crew can follow it with her, or so that she can perform her love scenes with Kermit to her best advantage. Or both. Second, in her possession are clip-on earrings, which must be extremely heavy. They look like they'd be hard to handle. I'd prefer it if she didn't carry them around. Someone who had to wear that would be constantly banging into things. Besides, are they valuable? Wouldn't they
