General Player Eng IS V2 11 4 R 101221.zipReport says certain birth defect conditions ‘a result of gene editing’ By Kim Heun The following is a statement from Life Hope International Co., Ltd. regarding its preliminary report, “Medical ethics as a fundamental approach to the deliberate release of genetically modified organisms,” regarding the transgenic pig developed by Life Hope’s parent company, Life Science Research Institute in South Korea. A panel convened by the United Nations Research Institute for the Humanities (UNRi) in 2010 concluded that “Gene editing, as it applies to life forms, is development-as-it-should-be, based on moral and ethical principles and that DNA alterations applied to human beings may constitute an unethical use of gene editing technology.” In September of last year, this panel published a report describing the research and associated ethical and regulatory issues surrounding human gene editing and the deliberate release of genetically modified organisms. The report made detailed recommendations for the use of gene editing in agriculture and other areas of human applications. With the publication of this new report, the panel now seems to be providing the analysis and ethical and regulatory recommendations necessary to introduce specific genetically modified organisms (GMOs) into human agricultural applications. Although the recommendations are of most concern to those concerned about the fate of GMO-modified organisms, which may eventually be released in large numbers, it would be wise for the regulatory and agricultural organizations and associations to be able to analyze the recommendations and interpret them
