Q: Printing multidimensional array I am trying to print this array. How do I? I tried below code `array('test2');` `foreach ($my_array as $key => $value) print_r($value);` ?> But getting an array. And I also tried to print it using `echo`, and I am getting function not found error. A: The simplest way would be to use `json_encode(array('test2'))`; `echo json_encode($my_array);` ?> However, you need to use a custom type that you create that has the `[list]` syntax, otherwise `json_encode` will treat your array as a string. This is what this custom type, thanks to the @Guffa comment, does: `value = $value; } }` ?> Outputs: `{ "value": "test2" }` Example Live demo on 3v4l.org Notice how in the second example, I had to use `json_encode` in order to get the output I wanted. If you're between 15 and 60 years old, you'll know that the website Vans is one of your absolute favourite places on the internet. The skate-wear company has brought its unprecedented culture of freedom and creativity to the world of mass-produced shoe styles, creating shoes that can be worn by anyone, everywhere, and designed by anyone. That's why, on Thursday, Vans announced that they would be revealing their first ever collection of footwear dedicated to young adults. As they write on their website, the aim of the collection is "to celebrate the spirit, style, and freedom that define what it means to be young at heart". This means that, instead of traditional models, the new collection consists of two new silhouettes: the "UPF Fly" and the "UPF Sock". And now, to demonstrate the versatility of the "UPF" line, we've put together a look, featuring two of the new footwear models. We've paired the slip-on "UPF Fly" with a smooth crewneck shirt, matching suede jacked with cargo shorts, and then we've used the chunky "UPF Sock" to complete the ensemble, with a pair of waxed sneakers.
