The present invention relates to a circuit for correcting an error or deviation in a motor control current supplied to a motor. The invention also relates to a method of controlling the motor, which incorporates the circuit. In order to control a motor such as an elevator by a servo motor, the current supplied to the motor must be controlled so that the motor generates force or torque corresponding to an output of the elevator. In a conventional elevator, a current supplied to a motor is detected by a current detector, to which the detected current is converted into a current signal which is used to drive the elevator. As is well known, a current is classified into a normal current which is supplied 1cdb36666d
