Connecting Photoshop to SketchUp You can use Photoshop to create or modify both 3D and 2D images. Images can easily be placed in the 3D environment of SketchUp as 3D layers. Photoshop allows you to import and export SketchUp objects (such as blocks, elements, and meshes) for use in another application. You can also import and export the 3D models of an architectural site as 3D layers. The following sections show you how to connect Photoshop to SketchUp. Add objects from SketchUp into Photoshop When you create a Photoshop document containing 3D elements, you can import and export them through the Layers panel to use in the other application (see the right side of Figure 3-2). Figure 3-2: Use Photoshop to import or export SketchUp blocks for use in the modeling environment. 1. Select the blocks you want to import into the Photoshop file. Make sure that the blocks have a check mark next to them to indicate that you have selected them. You can use the Select tool to select more than one block if necessary. 2. In the Layers panel, select Create a New Layer from the New Layers drop-down menu. 3. Double-click the newly created layer to open the Layer dialog box. 4. Select SketchUp from the Input Files drop-down menu. 5. Click OK to close the Layer dialog box and return to the Layers panel. 6. Import all the blocks by selecting the Import All Layers button (see Figure 3-3a). Figure 3-3: The 3D elements you import into Photoshop can be used in the 2D modeling environment. 7. Open the SketchUp interface. Select the Blocks icon from the navigation menu in the upper-left corner of the screen (see Figure 3-3b). Figure 3-4: A 3D version of the SketchUp blocks can be imported and saved as a layer. 8. Q: Using powershell Scriptblock and wait for it finish and read it's output I have powershell script that will execute in the background and return a output value that I need to read from it later using "Read-Host" method. So it looks like: $myValue = start-job -scriptblock { param($command,$arg1,$arg2) return $command $arg1 $arg2} -argumentlist "apt update" "192.168.2.11" "192.168.2.12" #I need to read it's value using Read-Host method. Is it possible? A: In order for your script to be able to read the exit code of an external process, you need to make sure it is a running process: $myValue = start-job -scriptblock { param($command,$arg1,$arg2) return $command $arg1 $arg2} -argumentlist "apt update" "192.168.2.11" "192.168.2.12" if ($myValue) { # '$myValue' contains the exit code $myValue return } else { # '$myValue' is not set due to the error $error[0] } Internal combustion engine technology is constantly improving and becoming more complex. For this reason, designing an engine's cooling system to include elements that improve efficiency and increase the performance of a vehicle is important. One of the aspects of cooling a vehicle engine that is critical to performance is the radiator utilized by the engine. Designing a radiator that is able to remove heat efficiently is important. This design is especially important in an aircraft engine that must perform over a larger temperature range than a vehicle engine. The temperature range in an aircraft engine may require temperatures to be maintained at a minimum or at a maximum. Maintaining temperatures over a range that is higher than normal is difficult because the engine may be at a temperature that is too low for normal operation or be at a temperature that is too high for normal operation. A conventional aircraft radiator is designed for use within an aircraft environment. These conventional aircraft radiators have a tube or "tubes" that connect to the engine or an engine accessory drive (a device that assists the engine in operating).
