Interaction of procyanidin B2 with human serum albumin by spectroscopic and molecular docking studies. The interaction of procyanidin B2 (PB2) with human serum albumin (HSA) was investigated by fluorescence spectroscopy, UV-vis absorption spectroscopy, circular dichroism (CD) spectroscopy, three-dimensional fluorescence spectroscopy, and molecular docking method. The fluorescence quenching of the HSA induced by PB2 was a result of a non-fluorescent complex. The results indicate that PB2 could bind to HSA with the electrostatic and hydrophobic interaction. The spectral changes of the microenvironment of aromatic amino acids around the fluorescence emission maximum were probed by three-dimensional fluorescence spectra and a significant blue shift of the $\lambda(\text{max})$ suggested that the microenvironment was under a more hydrophobic environment. The thermodynamic parameters calculated from van't Hoff equation revealed that the interaction of HSA with PB2 was an enthalpy-driven, endothermic and entropy-restricted process. CD spectroscopy suggests that the binding of PB2 induced conformational changes in the structure of HSA. The intrinsic binding constant ($K(b)$) was determined using the Ben
