The clinical aspects of hypoglycaemia are mainly neuroendocrine and symptoms include tremor, convulsions, paranoia and hypomnesia. In diabetic patients hypoglycaemia presents as a metabolic disorder with abnormal glucose release which can be treated by discontinuing the primary source of insulin (primarily diet) or by administration of hormone preparations. Unconsciousness due to hypoglycaemia is a contraindication to emergency treatments such as transfusion, gastric lavage or intubation and all efforts are directed at avoiding this complication. By knowing all the risk factors of the patient, the clinical approach will enable the physician to predict the incidence of hypoglycaemia and to take measures which will prevent this complication. Colombia without millions of refugees Posted from In the past years, Colombia had millions of refugees due to prolonged armed conflict. However, the situation has improved dramatically, because the security situation has considerably declined, the epidemic of HIV/Aids is under control and the economy is growing. According to the ministry of the justice and human rights, between 2012 and 2014, the total number of refugees decreased from approximately 1.5 million to 820,000 refugees, of which only 500,000 are women and children. If, over the next five years, the number of refugees declines to 580,000, the protection of women and children will be ensured and Colombia will be able to use adequate resources to address the problems of the remaining refugees. In addition to this, the situation is complicated by the presence of illicit gold mines in the region of Norte del Valle de Cauca, which have led to a significant influx of undocumented workers from Ecuador, Peru and Bolivia. Some of them are seeking to escape poverty and find work in the gold mines, but others are displaced persons who return to Colombia to find a better life in
