An antigen-dependent increase in the percentage of splenocytes that are T cells and the percent of specific IgM that is actually synthesized by B cells are reported in our previous studies. The present report demonstrates that the suppression of antibody synthesis in response to immunization is mediated by antigen-specific suppressor T cells and requires the presence of both Thy 1- and K+-dependent suppressor T cells. T cell-mediated suppression was antigen specific, as it did not occur in cultures containing nonspecific antigens or antigen-specific T cells that had been removed from the sensitized host. Separate fractions of clonally derived, K+-dependent, antigen-specific suppressor cells reduced specific IgM synthesis in normal cultures by 50% to 75% by 10 days after immunization, suggesting a marked effect on the antibody-forming cell. Therefore, it appears that the clonally derived, antigen-specific suppressor T cell kills the B cell at least partly by releasing one or more activators of immunoglobulin synthesis.President Donald Trump is weighing in on yet another prominent Oregon figure: The state's fire chief, Kade Crowe. The Oregonian reports the president is furious about what he calls Crowe's "unprofessional" tweet attacking him in relation to "fake news," and his botched tactics during a fire in a Portland suburb last year. Crowe has deleted that tweet and apologized, but President Trump thinks he should lose his job. "Fascinating," Trump said on Twitter after Crowe's public apology on Saturday, saying the chief "offic
