Bleach-based detection of lipase inhibitors in coffee, grape, olive, and yogurt samples by liquid chromatography-tandem mass spectrometry. Liquid chromatography-tandem mass spectrometry (LC-MS/MS) using the reaction monitoring mode was developed for the specific and sensitive detection of three lipase inhibitors, acylmethyl cellulose (AMC), tributyltin oxide (TBO), and di(2-ethylhexyl) maleate (DEHM), present in various food samples. The extraction was performed by acetonitrile, followed by purification on a C(18) column. After extraction, the extracts were analyzed by LC-MS/MS after on-line formation of lactone derivatives. Analysis of commercial food samples, such as coffee, grape, and yogurt, indicated that the LC-MS/MS method can be used to specifically detect AMC, TBO, and DEHM in real food samples. the safety and efficacy of laparoscopic appendicectomy in children. Between May 2006 and August 2007, a prospective study was conducted to evaluate whether laparoscopic appendicectomy could be performed safely in children. One hundred and fifteen children with uncomplicated acute appendicitis (AA) and suspected appendiceal abscess were included in the study. Cases with comorbid medical diseases were excluded. Data on duration of anesthesia, number of port sites used, accuracy of diagnosis, operation time, length of postoperative hospital stay, and complications were collected and analyzed. All the children had successful laparoscopic appendicectomy with no conversion to open surgery and no complications. The average operation time was 20.6 minutes (range, 15-30 minutes), and the average length of postoperative hospital stay was 1.9 hours (range, 1-2 hours). None of the patients had major complications. The incidence of minor complications was as follows: incisional infection (3.5%), ileus (0.9%), and fever (0.9%). Laparoscopic appendicectomy can be performed safely in children.
