This tutorial will cover how to use photo editing tools that can be found in Photoshop Elements. Basic image editing functions Image editing tools are usually found in most photo editing software but some are limited to either Photoshop or Elements. Cropping Cropping is an important step in image editing. Although its definition can vary, the most common form is removing or adding portions of an image in order to change its shape. You can use the crop tool to remove unnecessary parts of the image, like the sky above, or add the part of the subject you want to emphasize, like the person's hands. Cropping tool It is located at the top-left of the image window (see image 1). Using it, you can select the area you want to crop the image to. To do so, you can drag the mouse or press the left-click button. You can zoom in and out using the zoom function or press the Ctrl (Windows) or Cmd (Mac) button and the + (Windows) or - (Mac) button to zoom the image. Image 1 - The crop tool Image 2 - Selecting the crop tool Image 3 - Larger area selection Image 4 - Area selection details Image 5 - Cropped area Selecting the crop tool or when zoomed in You can also use the Paint Brush tool to crop the image. This tool is located on the right side of the image window (see image 1). Paint Brush tool It allows you to edit the image without erasing it, so the changes will be reversed when you exit the paint brush. Delete function The Delete tool is a way to remove an object from the image. You can use it to eliminate portions of the image that you do not want to keep. Delete tool Drag the mouse over an area to select it. It is the same as the select tool. If you want to select multiple areas, use the selection tool. Delete tool In the image below, the red and green areas have been selected and then deleted using the delete tool. Image 1 - Select the object to be deleted Image 2 - Select the area Image 3 - The effect of the delete tool Unfocusing the image You can blur an image so that it has a blurry, dreamy effect that appeals to fans of anime 388ed7b0c7

Breakfast in Bed (Paperback) Description When Gertie McKenna, a lonely, elderly woman of Irish descent, is offered a room in the magnificent Scottish mansion Almondvale, she is thrilled - until she finds she has not been alone after all. In the grounds of the estate her handsome would-be suitor, handsome and mysterious, is lurking. Only when Gertie starts to investigate his background does she realise that he may be a murderer, and that her stay at Almondvale is a living hell. Praise for Breakfast in Bed '[a] fast-paced reading experience... an entertaining and stylish tale' - BRITISH BOOK FUND 'The execution of elements and motifs - [a] cavalcade of aunts, sisters, parents and lover - is superb... The characters are exceedingly well drawn, and the narrative structure exceptional... a romp around Scotland in a rickety motorhome, with a cast of eccentric characters' - THE BRITISH REVIEW -4*u + 9, -o*u + 6 = -7*u for z. -1 Let r = 2832 - 2816. Q: Enum lock synchronization I have a code like below `enum ObjectState {Locked, Unlocked}; ObjectState myState = ObjectState.Locked; void Method() { while (myState == ObjectState.Locked) { Thread.Sleep(500); // 500ms delay } MethodToLock(); //... } void MethodToLock() { // lock statement }` The question is, in case two threads will request to lock at the same time, what is the better lock strategy? The strategy I have in mind is like below. An unsynchronized `ObjectState.Locked` is a better choice. For every object the lock statement is used, the value `ObjectState.Unlocked` is chosen. The lock statement will block the thread until it is unlocked. A: It's hard to tell from the code snippet, but it doesn't seem like you need to lock. I can't see any benefit to using threads in this case, so even if you're using threading, you can't really make use of it here. You could use `volatile`, but there's no reason to use threads for anything in this case. My husband and I always enjoy the lifestyle of a motorhome. We chose a fifth wheel for the flexibility of having "close to the town, far from the road." But, I realize that the problem comes in when we are reaching down to pick up children. The safe area for toddlers is very low, especially in a corner that has a low step up. The back of the unit next to the road, was only as high as my husband's head, and I couldn't reach down to get children out of the height to retrieve them. And the only thing I found that solved this issue was a toddler step, that would lift the entire vehicle off the ground, giving my husband and me easy access to the babies. Thanks for posting this and making it so easy to order one! While a step might be a good investment, it will only be a temporary solution. If you need a permanent solution, check out the "Folding Step" on another one of my sites; you can get a step that folds down and is smaller than a compact car for the price
