We'll begin our tutorial, which will show you how to manipulate an image using several Photoshop features, with a simple photograph. The photograph will be manipulated into multiple images, most of which will be saved to your desktop. But before we begin, you should know that if you cannot save files to your desktop, this exercise will not produce the desired end result. You should save all images you create to your desktop, keeping in mind that if you lose your image-saving program, you will be forced to recreate all of your images from scratch. Basic Photoshop Editing: The first photo Your first step will be to open a new document that will serve as the root layer. All layers will be either a lower or a higher layer than the root layer. You will also create a new layer above the root layer and save this layer as a group called "Layer 1." We'll use this Layer 1 to create the image on the following pages. Use the New Document window to create a document in Photoshop. Click the icon on the left side of the window to create a new document and then drag the icon to your desktop. The default size for your new document is 300 pixels wide by 150 pixels high. Change the width and height to the dimensions you want to use for the root layer and save the file as "5.jpg." The new document should be named "5.jpg." Next, it's time to create a new Layer 1 (Layer 1). Click the icon in the lower-right corner of your Photoshop window and select the New Layer command at the top of the list. A new Layer 1 is created, numbered one. The name of your new layer is "Layer 1." To create a new image, click the icon and navigate to File > New. For our purposes, we'll select the White Background/Transparent GIF option. Your new document will open in Photoshop. The original document is now the root layer. You'll see that a white background, a transparent gif and a new layer named "Layer 1" are created. Use the Free Transform command to resize the document to 300 pixels wide and 450 pixels high. Saving the document is optional, but we'll save the file as "6.jpg" to keep track of

New devices can detect when tumours will grow and shrink to determine optimum treatment. THERE is a surprisingly simple way to stop cancer from spreading. It takes a drug called a MEK inhibitor, kills off the cancer and leaves the body at peace. So why can't it be used as a weapon to destroy the tumour without having to use potentially toxic chemotherapy? That might now be feasible in what has been dubbed "personalised drug treatment". More than a quarter of the world's cancers are related to inflammation in the body. The same inflammation that leads to the staining of white blood cells on a slide can lead to tumour growth and spread. MEK has been known to play a role in the inflammation cycle. MEK inhibitor drugs can stop it dead in its tracks and kill the tumour. In a paper published in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, researchers identified two MEK proteins that contribute to the development of tumours. The findings led them to identify a key element of the inflammation cycle, called nuclear factor kappa-B, which in cancer cells makes these proteins more effective at spreading the cancer's sticky tentacles throughout the body. The team from Harvard, Mass. and the European Institute of Oncology, Milan, Italy found that by adding just two MEK inhibitors to a prostate cancer cell line, the cancer cells became untenanted and did not grow. In further tests the scientists also found that combining the MEK inhibitor drugs with

His strikeouts (10) against the Royals matched his total strikeouts in the first four games of the season. "I'm not sure if that's a sign of me really getting back to where I was," Buehrle said. Wildcat was the only true wild card for the White Sox on Saturday. Everyone else was a part of the big picture. Dayan Viciedo looked at Buehrle when third baseman Kevin Youkilis laid down a bunt attempt, saying, "We got Buehrle today." Viciedo didn't want to admit defeat after he failed to steal third base or get on base with a hit in the fourth inning. But he went down swinging after failing in both attempts. Viciedo didn't want to admit defeat after he failed to steal third base or get on base with a hit in the fourth inning. But he went down swinging after failing in both attempts. Buehrle was equal parts relieved and annoyed by Viciedo's comments. "A couple of times he said, 'We got you today.'" Buehrle said. "I'm glad he didn't say, 'You stink, too.'" The Chicago Tribune's Art Howe said Viciedo's comments surprised him and were a sign of the shifts in attitude in the clubhouse as the season has progressed. "He said something to me about that," Buehrle said. "It's been nice talking to him the last little while. He's been doing a great job for us, too." Royals coach Buddy Bell insisted Viciedo was not talking smack, and said only that he and Buehrle "get along pretty good." Buehrle had no issues with Viciedo after the game, or at least he didn't acknowledge it. "It doesn't make any difference to me," Buehrle said. "You can have a bunch of issues with each other, but in the clubhouse you always have to stick together. That's the way we
