Q: Can I use AutoIt and Python together? I need to use AutoIt for this and then use python to do the rest of the things that I need. Can I use both Python and AutoIt together in the same code? A: You can use python with AutoIt, see How do you call AutoIt scripts from python? In your case it would be: `import AutoItX a = AutoItX.AutoItX() a.WinSet(AutoItX.ControlType(),AutoItX.WinType.WH_MOUSE)`
`a.WinSetText(AutoItX.ControlType(), "") a.WinSetPos(AutoItX.ControlType(), 300, 320)`
`a.WinMove(AutoItX.ControlType(), AutoItX.WinType.WH_MOUSE, 300, 320)`
`a.WinClick(AutoItX.ControlType(),AutoItX.ControlType_MOUSE, AutoItX.MousePos_Relative)`
`a.WinWaitActive("First_Window") a.WinGetHandle(AutoItX.ControlType(), "First_Window")`
`a.WinGetText(AutoItX.ControlType(), "First_Window") a.WinUnload() a.Run()` Evaluation of a method for determining enzyme kinetics for large numbers of reactions. A computational method is described which estimates the parameters of a mass action kinetics equation for the reaction series in the presence of multiple time points and/or multiple enzymes. A single initial estimate for all unknown rate constants is made; this estimate is refined in a number of steps that include conventional nonlinear regression, optimization of least squares error, and interval analysis. The interval analysis approach is also used to improve the overall estimation technique so that it can be applied to reactions with the same or similar enzymes and similar initial estimates, thereby reducing the number of individual reactions for which kinetic estimates are obtained. The analytical basis of this method, combined with its ability to obtain parameter estimates for large numbers of reactions and enzymes, makes it well suited for the analysis of kinetic data for a large number of reactions, in particular when a wide range of initial conditions is used. I want it to do this smoothly when the user clicks the button. I used the setTimeout function to fake it, but it wasn't smooth. Is there something better that I can do? `$('#resume').click(function() { setTimeout(function() { $('#text').text('Click to resume').css('font-family', 'Arial'); }, 100); });` A: Why not use CSS transitions?
