Dangal Free Watch Call to remember Virgin Islands' immigrants On November 20, 400 undocumented immigrant workers stormed the Washington-bound Trailways bus, which terminated service at the National Airport. As the bus was pulled from the terminal by police, a crowd of about 10,000 people rallied, calling for an end to deportations, and defending the rights of undocumented workers. At least three children were reportedly injured, and three protesters were arrested. The protest, organized by the Washington-based National Immigrant Workers Association, was one of many such protests in recent months that decry the incarceration of undocumented immigrants, threats of deportation and the practices that make it even more difficult for undocumented workers to become citizens. The Virgin Islands is a diverse immigrant destination, bringing immigrant laborers in many different professions. Lawmakers on both sides of the aisle have cosponsored the Strengthening America's Security in the 21st Century Act, which would make sweeping changes to the U.S. immigration system, and has passed both the House and Senate. The bill, which has yet to be acted upon by President Bush, includes provisions that would help ensure unauthorized workers find jobs and would make it easier for workers to become citizens. These provisions include the following: - Allowing more naturalization opportunities to undocumented workers - in addition to children of undocumented workers - who have been in the U.S. for at least five years, have three years of school or have a job - the three latter qualifications are contingent on approval from the secretary of the Department of Homeland Security. - Waiving the E-Verify employment verification requirement - which prevents illegal workers from accessing jobs in the U.S., a requirement that is expected to become mandatory by the end of 2005. - Noting that the number of guest workers in the U.S. rose from about 1.2 million in 1990 to about 2.8 million today. The number of guest workers in the U.S. increased from the 1990s to more than 2 million today. The good news is that the number of guest workers in the U.S. is not expected to be affected by the changes made to the immigration system. The bad news, however, is that the only way to predict
