new data. Yes, it can cause problems if you're adding new data to an empty vDir as now your original data won't work.
Personally, if I need to check the size of a resource, I usually make a temp copy of it and then do the check on the new copy. I'm pretty sure the issue in the code is the "NewTable" record. The code checks that the table has been created, but you appear to be checking on the id of the table that has been created. Remove the id check and replace the record with the table record. The setup will now fail. There are other things that are failing, but that's the real issue. If you want to fix this the way I would do it, you'd remove the config.yaml and create a copy of it, and add your new data to it. You'd then need to rebuild the app to pick up the new config.yaml. Michael Treble added a comment - 02/Dec/12 9:07 AM I just checked out CloudControl and it appears their data_source parameter is not what you want. It expects a database connection string. I'm not sure if you need something like that or not. I'm back. As I mentioned, this isn't getting me past anything. I have added in the equivalent of the missing "NewTable" in your instance and still get the same result. I'm going to check the steps I did (
