Differences in the affinity and specificity of four human monoclonal antibodies for anti-Fc gamma receptor III (CD16). The capacity of 4 monoclonal antibodies raised against human Fc gamma receptor III (CD16) to bind various immune complexes (IC) was studied by indirect immunofluorescence and flow cytometry. All 4 monoclonal antibodies (mAb) interacted with the NK-precursors of peripheral blood lymphocytes (PBL) and neutrophils, but only 2 of them exhibited a marked binding to the IC formed by natural killer cells (NK) and adherent target cells. The specificity of mAb binding to IC was assessed by competition experiments. All 4 mAb reacted with IgG + IgG-IC but only 2 of them reacted with IgG + IgA-IC. The binding of mAb to IC was virtually abolished by pretreatment of target cells with neuraminidase. The results indicate that 2 of the 4 mAb react with an epitope in the Fc region of CD16. However, the 4 mAb reacted differently with IgG + IgG-IC and IgG + IgA-IC indicating that this epitope can be masked depending on the Ig isotype of the IC. Google is unveiling the latest update to Google Play Music for Android this week, and the company is adding a big one: an option to play music without incurring the service's data charges. That's significant, because the service uses up a ton of data to serve your music. The update makes the service sound like Apple's Beats Music rather than Spotify, with access to personalized music feeds, and according to a Googler that I spoke to, the company is also working on an Apple-like subscription model. The new option appears on the device's general Settings menu, and on a connected Android device (Android 4.4 or higher, and a mobile browser). You can pick it up and go with Google Play Music Unlimited, for $9.99 per month (about $1.25/hr). Like other Google music subscriptions, it won't have ads, or any restrictions. You'll have to be very specific about which tracks you want to pay for without data charges. You can get a list of albums or songs from your Google account. Of course, unless you're a Google Play Music subscriber, a lot of the good stuff is free, but you won't pay for it if you don't pick
