SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (RNS) His name is Will. He's the middle child of 13 kids. And he's never done a single thing with his life. Until now, that is. That's because he's been sitting around in his front room at the Arizona Christian College waiting for me to turn up with the keys to my new car, a scooter with which to ferry him to college, and a Bible. That's the help he needs, and the support he's been waiting on, for the past two years, Will said during an interview with RNS. “I’m real happy now that I can serve a purpose,” the 18-year-old said, by way of explanation for the fact that it’s been almost two years since the college first heard about him, on a mission trip to Honduras. “When God gives you a purpose,” Will said, he should never neglect to use it. As Will tells it, he was in the throes of a self-described “stupid phase.” By all accounts, he was perfectly healthy. He had a good heart. He had a nice family. But, he said, he was out of work, and out of school, and didn't know what he was going to do. "I wasn't happy," Will said. "I was just going through the motions." Yet, there was this genuine pull – a strange sense of conviction. He wanted to use his time and talents in a positive way. And God told him to go to Honduras. He started as a participant in a new ministry called Moving Mountains -- a Christian organization with a decidedly big, international reach. In the 2-1/2 years since he was placed with the organization, Will has forged life-long friendships, traveled to parts of the world he had never been to, worked with ex-prisoners and drug addicts, and spent time with some of the most marginalized and destitute people in Central America – people who are suffering from extreme poverty and despair. And he's set an example for them. He's not the same person he was before he got to Honduras, Will said. “When

TV review: 'Glee' and 'Human Target' Hard to know what to say about “Glee” without comparing it to “Glee” itself. The show recently ended its 2-year run, yet its fans have demonstrated an uncanny ability to define and redefine it. To some, it’s an NBC sitcom about gregarious high school jocks and cheerleaders; to others, it's a star-studded musical about hip life choices and the power of family. It's a high school melodrama with a twist. It's cheesy and funny and everyone gets a line. Last week was the best of "Glee," as far as I'm concerned, that when it combined the show's strongest attributes. The 16-episode season wrapped with a particularly sensational performance of "All That Love" with the glee club. Glee often plays with the heart-wrenching clichés of high school drama, but “All That Love” merged two genres that shouldn’t be combined: the high school musical and the high school romance. The month of May, however, should be remembered as the month that “Glee” sort of lost its way. May 4 was the date with which the season ended, but it also was the date when an entire episode centered on the Blaine-Daly love story. In many ways,

“Everything Has Changed” was just as compelling as “All That Love,” but it was less fun. It could have been as riveting as “All That Love” as a jukebox musical. “All That Love” wasn’t just fascinating because of the songs (“Loser Like Me” from Def Leppard and “In My Head” from Fifth Harmony), it was cool because you didn’t have to be a jukebox musical expert to appreciate them. “Everything Has Changed,” however, wasn’t as involving because it didn’t have the musical score or vocal performances to support the story line. While it wasn't a bad song, the execution of the mongrel of a musical was lacking. Still, "All That Love" wasn't without its flaws either. "All That
