For example, the Photo Merge feature in Photoshop CS5 is a must-have for creating collages from multiple images. The best thing you can do for yourself is to follow this advice when using Photoshop, and you won't get lost in a sea of confusing options: * Organize your images in folders by theme or type — then put the most commonly used images into a folder called All. * Look for a Photoshop tutorial. Q: time.Sleep() function in python I'm trying to figure out how to use time.sleep() in Python. The issue is that I've set a sleep time with the time.sleep() function in a while loop and I want to start a new loop when the sleep time is up. This is an example of my code: import time startTime = time.time() while True: if time.time() - startTime >= 3: break time.sleep(3) so I want to have a while loop that sleeps for 3 seconds and after 3 seconds, starts over. This code is in pycharm using python 2.7, or I'm not sure if it counts as a python version. Sorry if it is a noob question. Thank you A: Simple solution is to do import time startTime = time.time() def repeat(): while True: if time.time() - startTime >= 3: break time.sleep(3) while True: repeat() There are much more elegant solution using threading from threading import Thread class RepeatThread(Thread): def __init__(self): Thread.__init__(self) self.startTime = time.time() def run(self): while True: if time.time() - self.startTime >= 3: break time.sleep(3) t = RepeatThread() t.start() or with threading.Thread import time import threading class RepeatThread(Thread): def __init__(self): Thread.__init__(self) self.startTime = time.time()
