Daily Paper A Daily Paper was an English broadsheet newspaper published by George Whalley & Company Ltd. between 1797 and 1833. History George Whalley & Company was founded in 1797 to distribute fine white uncoated broadsheets and newsbooks to the retailers and circulating libraries. The company became bankrupt in 1808. In 1810 the bankrupt Whalley and Co. Ltd. was purchased by William Clay and Co., whose print works and paper mills were in Louth. The paper was renamed The Lincolnshire Daily News and was published in Sleaford, Lincolnshire. In 1820 a new company was formed, George Whalley & Co., when the trading company was extended to the mail service and express delivery business. The newspaper was renamed The Lincolnshire Daily News and circulated across Lincolnshire, while the business trading was carried out from Louth. At a meeting of the directors held on 26 July 1832, the name of the paper was changed to The Lincolnshire Daily Paper and the paper was published from Headley, Lincolnshire. The business remained in the hands of the Clay family, who later become proprietors of the Daily Telegraph. The Daily Paper was still being published by Clay in 1839. As The Lincolnshire Daily Paper it was written and printed in the Clay type, and carried news of the times, in addition to its listing of local concerts, with a column headed "Music". The paper's offices were in Headley Square, Headley. In 1833 the paper was merged into the Daily News and Weekly Chronicle, a new paper published by Charles Elliot. Alderney's History of Lincolnshire notes that the Lincolnshire County Chronicle and Daily News was started by William Clay in 1807, and printed by the Clay family in Louth. The paper was edited by the Clay family in the late 1700s and early 1800s. The newspaper later became The Lincolnshire Weekly News and Daily News. Kjøkken Jeg så hva det var du kommer med, og så viser han meg noen av ulvene og alle av får og galopper i vårt kjøkken. Ulvene var både få og kom for å treffe.
