The new technology was developed to further FIFA's commitment to giving players more control over their gameplay. Working with athlete specialists, DALLAS STARS players Sean Davis and Adam Moffat spent time in training and motion capture suits to help develop new gameplay modes. "We're very pleased to work closely with DALLAS STARS players Sean Davis and Adam Moffat, whose input and feedback helped to shape the new technology," said Marc Ebeid, General Manager of ProMatch. "We're confident that the debut of "HyperMotion" in Fifa 22 Activation Code will give players more control and customization over the way they approach the game." "There's been a lot of change in the game over the past couple of versions," said Sean Davis. "I'm excited to work with the team to try and make the new stuff fit into the DNA of the game." "It's great to have the chance to work with such a talented and hard-working group of people," said Adam Moffat. "The information we've been able to gather has helped improve the gameplay experience for all players." HyperMotion technology is accessed through the game's "Creation" menu. Through the "HyperMotion" setting, players can now review the footage of players performing in motion, and change settings based on their understanding of the game's new elements. For example, giving players more control over the game could be accessed by choosing gameplay settings that let them move quicker across the pitch, or change the defensive styles of the opposing team. Players can also sign new contracts and receive virtual coins as part of the "Academy" mode. Coins can be used in parts of "Academy" mode where teams have a limited selection of kits, but players are not restricted to only playing in a particular kit during a match. "If I play as a striker, my legs are visible," explained A. J. Cochran, FIFA 18's Director of Play Testing. "It's a way for the player to have an idea of where he or she is." FIFA 22 will be released on September 28 on Xbox One, PlayStation 4, PC and Nintendo

Q: As an author, I have a lot of reviews and rejections at journals I never submit to, why? When I click on submission history and my countries, I have this: A: I have figured it out now. About 8 years ago, I spent a lot of time at Publons and became friends with a lot of the editors. Several of them would read the manuscripts sent to them as a recommendation from other editors. The publishers back then would sometimes send rejections, but they were few and far between. I don't remember how it works now, but I think these editors are now only specific domain experts in the field. Some people have a lot of papers to read for job adverts. (I don't know why, but I did when I was working in a software consultancy. Do software engineering or mathematics job adverts have more papers than others?) Most publishers choose at least one or two reviewers to look at all of the manuscripts sent to them. The reviewers might be more people for specific journals. I don't know how it works. I probably have at least 50% of the papers from my library in these journals. This means that most of the times, the reviews are not from someone I know, but from someone the journal chose. Although I had accepted to review that manuscript, I likely rejected it. The reason is that the reviewer has lots of choices. I am probably one of the few, but there are thousands of referees. I have chosen something to fill my time, so I do not want to bother myself with something that does not interest me. A: I am in that situation as well, I spend a lot of my time
