Roblox is an online game platform and game creation system developed by Roblox Corporation that allows users to program games and play games created by other users. Created by David Baszucki and Erik Cassel in 2004 and released in 2006, the platform hosts user-created games of multiple genres coded in the programming language Lua. For most of Roblox's history, it was relatively small, both as a platform and a company. Roblox began to grow rapidly in the second half of the 2010s, and this growth has been accelerated by the COVID-19 pandemic. Roblox is free to play, with in-game purchases available through a virtual currency called Robux. As of August 2020, Roblox had over 164 million monthly active users, including more than half of all American children under 16. Although Roblox has received generally positive reviews from critics, it has faced criticism for its moderation, microtransactions, and exploitative practices directed toward children. A group of PhD students from Australia and China studying AI and machine learning research have predicted that their next breakthrough, which will lead to sentient AI (artificial intelligence) will be in the form of a computer virus that can learn and evolve on its own. These viruses would be powered by a new chip, designed by the same team behind the Tensor processing unit and called the SyNAPSE, which Intel announced at its Intel Technology Forum in Beijing, China. The chip is designed for high-performance deep learning, and it is expected that because of this, companies and researchers will try to use the chips to program a variety of new AI projects. To develop this chip, the team, based at Murdoch University in Australia, has embarked on a project called FLOR, which stands for For All New Roles of the Optical Regime. The computing architecture of FLOR is basically based on a new chip called the SyNAPSE. The SyNAPSE is comprised of a programmable microchip that is capable of uniting the vision, audio, video, and CPU capabilities of a normal computing unit, into a single chip. This is something most gamers have never witnessed before, and because of this, several gaming applications are also being developed using the chip. The new chip is a 32-by-32-microgrid design, comprised of 18 computational cores, a dynamic memory, a communications bus, and a compiler for the Lua programming language, and it is about the size

With concerns about a player's health, team doctors and medics can move and communicate freely during a game. This promotes team bonding, and helps lessen players' feelings of loneliness after the match. Unfortunately, these relationships may be lacking at lower level football matches. A team-based study of footballers with and without depression, and published in the British Journal of Psychiatry, found that male footballers with depression reported fewer social contacts - with particularly low support from teammates - than their peers who did not suffer from depression. Limiting social and emotional interactions at a match can lead to players experiencing post-match depression This finding supports previous findings that players with depression were more lonely and isolated than their non-depressed peers, and that increased emotional support and social contact could help improve their mental wellbeing. Limiting the emotional and social interactions that take place at a match can make players more vulnerable to mental health problems. After the game, players can sometimes feel lower than they did when they first got up, due to a lack of emotion. However, this does not always develop into depression, so some players may just feel less energetic and have a lower mood. Post-match, however, problems can include depression, anxiety, feelings of restlessness or panic, and suicidal thoughts. The first step towards helping a player is to simply pay attention to their mental health. This can be done before, during
